Commodities In News

Malaysian palm oil futures rebounded on Monday from their lowest in seven months, following gains in rival soyoil, but an expected rise in output and weak exports capped the upside. The benchmark palm oil contract FCPOc3 on the Bursa Malaysia Derivatives Exchange closed up 0.31%, or 6 ringgit, at 1,957 ringgit ($473.6) per tonne, after rising to 1,982 ringgit earlier in the day. On Friday, it fell to its lowest since Nov. 27, at 1,946 ringgit. In the June quarter, the tropical oil shed 7%, its seventh quarterly drop in a row. "Palm is taking support from the U.S. and Chinese market," said one Kuala Lumpur-based trader, referring to Monday's move. Chicago soybean futures rose for a second session on Monday to a one-year high as a thaw in U.S.-China trade relations following talks between the two nations underpinned the market. soyoil futures BOc2 were up 1% on Monday after rising 1.6% on Friday.
