COMMODITY BUZZ

- Gold prices fell in Asia on Thursday with more investors expecting the Fed to hike rates this month, though sentiment remains mixed with many saying the central bank could wait a month or two for further clarity on economic plans by President Donald Trump. Gold for May delivery on the Comex division of the New York Mercantile Exchange fell 0.26% to $1,246.75 a troy ounce, while copper futures gained 0.29% to $2.739 a pound as investors awaited developments that have led to two major copper mines in Chile and Indonesia to halt operations over labor and regulatory issues. Overnight, gold Futures slumped on Wednesday, as the dollar firmed after hawkish comments from several Federal Reserve officials raised expectations of a March rate hike.
- Crude prices drifted weaker in Asia on Thursday with market players looking again at weekly U.S. data on rig counts at the end of the week and more details on a coordinated effort by key major producers to curb output. On the New York Mercantile Exchange crude futures for April delivery eased 0.15% to $53.75 a barrel, while on London's Intercontinental Exchange, Brent was last quoted at $56.34 a barrel. Overnight, crude futures settled lower on Wednesday, after U.S. crude stockpiles swelled to a record high. For the week ending February 24, The U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) said that crude oil inventories rose by 1.5 million, less than forecast but touched a record high of 520.2 million. 1.84 million barrels, while distillates fell a sharp 3.73 million barrels. Stocks at the Cushing hub rose 544,000 barrels.

SPECIAL NEWS

- The Federal Reserve is setting the stage for a U.S. interest-rate increase later this month, with the central bank's leading voice on international economics saying the global economy seems to have turned a corner, clearing the way for a hike "soon." "After being an important constraint in the past few years, the external environment currently appears more benign than it has been for some time, even though risks remain," Fed Governor Lael Brainard said Wednesday in an address at Harvard University. "Assuming continued progress, it will likely be appropriate soon to remove additional accommodation, continuing on a gradual path." The speech marks a shift from the cautious, dovish tone that Brainard has used in many of her recent speeches, and adds an important voice to the chorus of officials signaling rates may rise when the Fed next meets in mid-March.
- China's newly appointed banking regulator said on Thursday that risk prevention in the sector will be a more prominent policy focus in 2017. Guo Shuqing, chairman of the China Banking Regulatory Commission (CBRC), also said more than 430 billion yuan ($62.5 billion) of debt-to-equity swap deals had been signed as of early February. The remarks by Guo, regarded as one of China's most experienced financial services professionals, were his first since getting appointed last week. He was speaking ahead of the opening of the annual meeting of China's parliament on March 5.
