Commodities In News

Malaysian palm oil futures fell for a second consecutive session on Thursday evening due to a firmer ringgit MYR and concerns over the longer term outlook for production and exports. A stronger ringgit, palm's currency of trade, usually makes the edible oil more expensive for foreign buyers. It gained 0.1% against the dollar on Thursday to a three-day high of 4.1310. The benchmark palm oil contract for September delivery FCPOc3 on the Bursa Malaysia Derivatives Exchange was last down 0.3% at 1,951 ringgit ($472.28) per tonne at the close of trade. Palm oil looks neutral in a range of 1,944-1,966 ringgit per tonne, and an escape could suggest a direction, said Wang Tao, a Reuters market analyst for commodities and energy technicals. ringgit is firm today, and the market is waiting for the Indian budget due tomorrow," said a Kuala Lumpur-based trader, adding that traders were waiting to see if India would amend its import tariffs on edible oils.
